This is an interesting set of rules for RL and PF. I am tempted to say "re-write", as you have already mentioned some potential mistakes, and I'm sure you will definitely re-write it, and that is going to be a great improvement. The first thing that crossed my mind is the spelling of the word Tête - it is spelled there like "Tet" (sound of the word "nope" in French). I think this is quite an important mistake to make, as the word can actually be (incorrectly) spelled as "Tet" and give rise to confusion. Also, what is the meaning of "prêt" (present)? I think it means "out of service" but can be used in French in a wider context? Is the "d" in "production/dépistage" a typo? Why is a complete unit made up of a haul truck on it's own? Surely, it should be common practice that a haul truck can be placed on a flatbed and transported to where it is required with only 2 elements? It would be much simpler. Where does the Tipper come in? Is it used when other carriers are too large to place in the vehicle? Why is a loader not specified here? Line 3 - The candidate that we have selected has been taken over by a courier company. Is this common practice? Line 7 - Can you provide some rationale as to why the unit is still required when it can be transferred to another unit? Can you provide some rationale as to why the unit is not placed in storage to be destroyed or recycled? The length of the convoy is referred to as "la longueur de la convoy". I think this is a mistake and should be replaced with "la longueur de la ligne" (the longueur of the line). Line 9- for long distance delivery, how often is this done? If this is not done and the retrieval is always the responsibility of the consignee, is there a difference between "à prêt" and "à disposition"? The Manual mentions that the manufacturer can change this to "à disposition" when the unit is placed "au chômage" (which translates to "hijacked"). I believe it should be "au chômage", as this is the French term and means "on loan". Line 11- this is the start

Whole head sectioning. Whole head sectioning is a basic, introductory technique for describing gross anatomical features in the brains of small animals. In this article the authors summarize the features that should be considered when choosing and conducting whole head sectioning. They provide clear guidelines for sectioning technique and discuss standard cutting planes. This article also provides a brief overview of some of the most commonly encountered neuroanatomical features, including those depicted in Figure 1, that you can find when working with whole head sections. The unexpected star of this number is a revolutionary hybrid between deep magic and traditional stage tricks. With an old-school skill to it, you'll be amazed as a spectator and the audience will think that magic is completely impossible. You learn "Ascetic is one of the best magic talents ever" James Kaloyanides, magician, mentalist and mentalistic coach "Ascetic is a new talent who dominates the general public and it is one of the best magic talents as the number of spectators is surprising when beginning the show, you throw away your illusions and tricks, you only use your imagination, talents, emotions and body." This is a style of magic that makes the spectator always left imagining and amazed by the spectacle of the magical show. The creator Asci Cleary is a young magician who has been learning ever since he was a teenager and since he has been performing the show to the general public. He started and gave up traditional magic, because he was not able to find a magic he felt comfortable with and he started to study magic by himself. He studied a lot of magic, learned every technique and then blended it with his natural talents and the moment he started using his imagination he became a magician that the public was used to see. "Ascetic is The Future of magic" Ascetic is a unique and incredible magic that is comfortable to perform and enjoyable for the spectators. He is completely surrounded by the world of magic and he has this ability to perform unusual magic without fail, achieving results unexpected by the spectators.
